this book studies the funding problems with shareholder litigation through a functionally comparative way in fact funding problems with shareholder lawsuits may largely discourage potential shareholder litigants who bear high financial risk in pursuing such a claim but on the other hand they may not have much to gain considering the lack of incentives for potential shareholder claimants effective funding techniques should be in place to make shareholder actions function as a corporate governance tool and discipline corporate management the book analyzes among others the practice of funding shareholder litigation in the australia canada the uk the us and israel and covers all of the typical approaches being used in financing shareholder litigation in the current world for instance israel and canada quebec and ontario are probably unique in having a public funding mechanism for derivative actions and class actions while australia is the country where third party litigation funding is originated and is growing rapidly based on this comparative research the last part of this book discusses how to fund shareholder litigation in china in context of its social and legal background and what kind of problems need to be solved if certain funding techniques are used this collection of essays represents the first in depth scholarly treatment of housing policies and conditions throughout the caribbean the contributors consider both the performance of the state and the autonomous activities of the poor making this volume an invaluable contribution to future planning and debate the essays each dealing with a specific island or group of islands collectively address four main themes the history of housing provision since colonization current housing conditions state policies toward housing provision and the changing relationships between governments international funding agencies the private housing sector and the peoples responses these investigations not only highlight the often alarming problems that caribbean nations face in providing adequate housing for the poor but also implicate governments in past and present failures and poor performances however the essays are also filled with useful insights about the ways in which progressive housing policies can be formulated and implemented for example the volume suggests that the caribbean s rich heritage of folk and vernacular architectural styles should be taken into serious account in future planning efforts in a concluding synthesis chapter the volume editors argue that a more progressive future is attainable if all parties exhibit the political will that the poor have already demonstrated explores the effect of malnutrition on school enrollment and extent of schooling in many developing countries less than half of all primary school students have enrolled by age six and many do not enroll until age eight or nine this paper uses data from the ghana living standards survey to explore this phenomenon the authors develop a number of explanations for delayed primary school enrollment in ghana but their main focus is on nutrition they find that infant and child malnutrition has a major impact on the age at which children enroll in school they argue that chronically malnourished children tend to be kept out of school by their parents because they perform poorly and the benefit to them of schooling is therefore low chronic malnutrition which is extensive in ghana has been shown to stunt growth retard mental development and reduce motivation and energy levels because growth can eventually compensate for the initial retardation caused by malnutrition the authors suggest that there may be an quoteoptimal agequote of primary school enrollment for malnourished children that is higher than that for other children the authors also explore the effects of malnutrition on the number of years of schooling completed by taking enrollment age into account when analyzing the statistics on dropouts the authors are able to remedy a major shortcoming of previous studies they thus develop a method of identifying the further negative effects of malnutrition even when delayed enrollment is common at the conclusion of world war ii asia was hardly more than a geographic expression yet today we recognize asia as a vibrant and assertive region fully transformed from the vulnerable nation states that emerged following the second world war the transformation was by no means an inevitable one but the product of two key themes that have dominated asia s international relations since 1945 the competition between the united states and the soviet union to enlist the region s states as assets in the cold war and the struggle of nationalistic asian leaders to develop the domestic support to maintain power and independence in a dangerous international context becoming asia provides a comprehensive systemic account of how these themes played out in asian affairs during the postwar years covering not only east asia but south and central asia as well in addition to exploring the interplay between nationalism and cold war bipolarity during the first postwar decades authors alice lyman miller and richard wich chart the rise of largely export led economies that are increasingly making the region the global center of gravity and document efforts in the ongoing search for regional integration the book also traces the origins and evolution of deep rooted issues that remain high on the international agenda such as the taiwan question the division of korea and the threat of nuclear proliferation the kashmir issue and the nuclearized indian pakistani conflict and offers an account of the rise of china and its implications for regional and global security and prosperity primary documents excerpted throughout the text such as leaders talks and speeches international agreements secret policy assessments enrich accounts of events offering readers insight into policymakers assumptions and perceptions at the time
