Sociology and Scientism 2014-02-01 during the 1920s a new generation of american sociologists tried to make their discipline more objective by adopting the methodology of the natural sciences robert bannister provides the first comprehensive account of the emergence of this objectivism within the matrix of the evolutionism of lester ward and other founders of american sociology objectivism meant confining inquiry to the observable externals of social behavior and quantifying the results although objectivism was a marked departure from the theoretical and reformist sociology of the prewar years and caused often fierce intergenerational struggle sociological objectivism had roots deep in prewar sociology objectivism first surfaced in the work of sociology s second generation the most prominent members of which completed their graduate work prior to world war i it gradually took shape in what may be termed realist and nominalist variants the first represented by luther lee bernard and the second by william f ogburn and f stuart chapin for bernard a scientific sociology was radical prescribing absolute standards for social policy for ogburn and chapin it was essentially statistical and advisory in the sense that experts would concern themselves exclusively with means rather than ends although the objectivists differed among themselves they together precipitated battles within the american sociological society during the 1930s that challenged the monopoly of the chicago school paving the way for the informal alliance of parsonian theorists and a new generation of quantifiers that dominated the profession throughout the 1950s by shedding new light on the careers of ward and the other founders and by providing original accounts of the careers of the leading objectivists bannister presents a unique look at the course of sociology before and after world war i he puts theory formation in an institutional ideological and biographical setting and thus offers an unparalleled look at the formation of a modern academic profession in which we interact with one another or shape how we live our lives in new media and society deana rohlinger provides a sociological approach to understanding how new media shape our interactions our experiences and our institutions using case studies and in class exercises rohlinger explores how new media alter everything from our relationships with friends and family to our experiences in the workplace each chapter takes up a different topic our sense of self and our relationships education religion law work and politics and assesses how new media alter our worlds as well as our expectations and experiences in institutional settings instead of arguing that these changes are good or bad for american society the book uses sociological theory to challenge readers to think about the consequences of these changes which typically have both positive and negative aspects new media and society begins with a brief explanation of new media and social institutions highlighting how sociologists understand complex changing relationships after outlining the influence of new media on our identities and relationships it discusses the effects new media have on how we think about education practice our religions understand police surveillance conceptualize work and participate in politics each chapter includes key sociological concepts engaging activities that illustrate the ideas covered in the chapter as well as links films and references to additional online material

New Media and Society 2019-02-05 over the last four decades immigration from the caribbean and sub saharan africa to the u s has increased rapidly in several states african immigrants are now major drivers of growth in the black population while social scientists and commentators have noted that these black immigrants social and economic outcomes often differ from those of their native born counterparts few studies have carefully analyzed the mechanisms that produce these disparities in immigration and the remaking of black america sociologist and demographer tod hamilton shows how immigration is reshaping black america he weaves together interdisciplinary scholarship with new data to enhance our understanding of the causes of socioeconomic stratification among both the native born and newcomers hamilton demonstrates that immigration from the caribbean and sub saharan africa is driven by selective migration meaning that newcomers from these countries tend to have higher educational attainment than those who stay behind as a result they arrive in the u s with some advantages over native born blacks and in some cases over whites he also shows the importance of historical context prior to the civil rights movement black immigrants socioeconomic outcomes resembled native born blacks much more closely regardless of their educational attainment in their country of origin today however certain groups of black immigrants have better outcomes than native born black americans such as lower unemployment rates and higher rates of homeownership in part because they immigrated at a time of expanding opportunities for minorities and women in general hamilton further finds that rates of marriage and labor force participation among native born blacks that move away from their birth states resemble those of many black immigrants suggesting that some disparities within the black population stem from processes associated with migration rather than from nativity alone hamilton argues that failing to account for this diversity among the black population can lead to incorrect estimates of the social progress made by black americans and the persistence of racism and discrimination he calls for future research on racial inequality to disaggregate different black populations by richly detailing the changing nature of black america immigration and the remaking of black america helps scholars and policymakers to better understand the complexity of racial disparities in the twenty first century

Seven Rules for Social Research 2018-06-26 originally published separately weber s science as a vocation and politics as a vocation stand as the classic formulations of his positions on two related subjects that go to the heart of his thought the nature and status of science and its claims to authority and the nature and status of political claims and the ultimate justification for such claims together in this volume these newly translated lectures offer an ideal point of entry into weber s central project understanding how as weber put it in the west alone there have appeared cultural manifestations that seem to go in the direction of universal significance and validity

The Vocation Lectures 2004-03-15 the enlightenment promised humanity a bright future of emancipation which never actually materialized instead our social order is still based on gender inequality which rests upon a false conviction that the individual can be conceived of as separate from community that the more individualized a person is the less they need to establish links with their community to feel safe and that the more they use reason to build a relationship with the world the less they need emotions th is conviction which guides the ideals of our social system is based on a fantasy the fantasy of individuality this volume is a step in fleshing out the historical reasons for gender inequality from the origins of humankind to present times in the western world it is a theoretically informed and up to date overview of the history of gender inequality that takes as its starting point the mechanisms through which human beings construct their self identity starting from a peripheral interdisciplinary and heterodox perspective this book intends to appraise the complexity of gender identity in all its richness and diversity it seeks to understand the persistence of relationality in supposedly fully individualized male selves and the construction of new forms of individuality among women that did not follow the masculine model it is argued here that by balancing community and self beyond the contradictions of hegemonic masculinity modern women are struggling to build a new more empowering form of personhood the author is an archaeologist who uses her discipline not only to provide data theory and a long term perspective but also in a metaphorical sense to construct a socio historical genealogy of current gender systems through an examination of how personhood and self identity have been constructed in the western world
