Managing Community Health Services

this book was originally conceived in 1987 it was then seen as a contribution towards improved management and policy making in a diffuse and neglected area of nhs management the focus of the book is the old community health services those transferred to area health authorities from local authorities in the 1974 re organization of the nhs these diverse services while grouped together had little objectively in common occupying as they do a hazy middle ground between hospital and family practitioner services however since 1974 there have been a number of major developments which have opened opportunities for change and development in these services these include the resurrection of concern with public health the attempted closure of large mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and the development of community care the introduction of general management and the implication for health and local authorities of the white papers caring for people promoting better health and working for patients traditionally community health services were seen as low status and a professional dead end this in turn has led to a rather uneven body of literature the growth of general management has led to a demand for a more coherent management orientated literature it is our hope that this book will encourage the production of more literature in this area
